Stranger Than Witches (Witches of Secret Hallow) (Volume 3) Nora Lee

Kimberly Leif dreams of flying. Not on a broomstick, like the other witches of Secret Hallow occasionally do (usually after drinking way too much hard cider), but on wings. She chalks it up to having Thorn, an eagle, as her familiar...until she wakes up one morning covered in feathers. Plenty of witches have special talents, but shapeshifting shouldn't be one of them. The only other witch who's ever shapeshifted was Kimberly's mom. And the last thing Kimberly wants is to be like the woman who abandoned her as a child. She has a son of her own—Keene—who may not have a whit of magical power in him, and he needs a grounded mother who can guide him through a mundane life among witches. Not a mom who's going to fly away as soon as the wind shifts. With Thorn's help, Kimberly must get control of her urge to fly. Not just for her sake, but for her little boy's chance to have a complete family, too.
